CASE STUDIES

Advocacy and disputes: Mid-term contract negotiation

FTI Consulting undertook a mid-contract review on behalf of a major provider of services to the mining industry. The contract involved providing services to remote mining locations and set rates for services including catering, building and grounds maintenance and transport. Largely, the existing escalators in the contract were based on forecasts of CPI.

Our role involved reviewing the service providers' historical cost escalation against contracted escalation, and found that the escalators in the contract were inappropriate, based on a number of issues. This included the remote location (with specific cost drivers), the high wage component that drove most service costs, and the specific nature of the services themselves.

Our in-house model enabled the service provider to claw back significant (multi-million dollar) losses from earlier periods and build out a forecast for the next five years, based on service specific forecasts of costs.

Bespoke forecasting tool

FTI Consulting has been engaged to undertake a range of economic impact studies to assess the economic contribution of different industries, specific firms and how policy/regulatory change would impact this contribution. Our team have applied these tools across a number of industries including tourism, construction, and mining. FTI builds models to fit the needs of the specific engagement – for example, where FTI builds input-output models and multipliers, inputs and outputs can be targeted to the specific regions in which the business operates. Frameworks are often employed to assess direct and indirect implications, spanning the full supply chain as well as flow-on impacts.

Economic impact assessments

FTI Consulting undertook an economic impact assessment of a large minerals processing plant. Our team assisted the proponent to make a case for government support by demonstrating not only the traditional economic impacts (impacts on the regional economy and job creation), but assessed the environmental impacts (reduction in GHG emissions), social impacts (regional and indigenous opportunities), and undertook a deep dive on the value chain to determine the longer term impacts of processing battery minerals on shore.
