

IMPACT OF BREXIT

International Trade: The UK perspective

The UK's new direction as an independent trading nation

As the United Kingdom prepares to exit the European Union, the priorities and policies that will dictate the UK's trade strategy will have a huge impact on businesses and consumers. Business success in this new environment requires an understanding of the economic and political considerations that determine the outcome of free trade negotiations. For the first time in 40 years, the UK will be setting its own course on international trade.

How will the UK's future trade agreements effect your business?

Modern trade agreements will result in major changes to the regulatory environment and the level of competition, even for those businesses with a purely domestic focus. Other sectors of the economy will find significant commercial opportunities as new markets are made viable by free trade agreements. For businesses with aspirations for growth in international markets, a high quality and properly focused agreement will make a significant difference.

Such high quality trade deals require extensive collaboration between the Government and the private sector and all businesses with an interest in the outcome of trade deals should be involved throughout the process.

FTI Consulting's International Trade Practice is uniquely well placed to help our clients meet the challenges of Brexit and seize the opportunities of global trade. Our trade experts can identify the regulatory threats and opportunities, and provide the strategy and approach to respond effectively.
